The Fear from the Mountains

33 1 1

Chapter 1 by Ricard Garcia

The dog stopped barking, birds ceased their songs, and silence dominated everything. The air was cold and humid. And there was something strange in the atmosphere. Suddenly, we all could hear the howling and the sound froze our brood. Our instinct told us to run away, try to escape from the creature that had made that scary sound. But we had to carry on. It was the only chance to rescue the pool girl who had disappeared a few days before during a night filled with horror in the village down in the valley. We had decided to find the girl in the high mountains North of the village. The bold legends in the area told about ancient spirits and creatures haunting the mountains and forests, creatures than went down to the lower villages in the night and took people away.

Chapter 2 by Nita Mocanu

So we for gaining power over the spirits we knew, we had to talk to the dog. But when search for him he was transformed. The dog was not the dog. He was Jacqueline.
